Compound adjectives exercises worksheets pdf

In this complex and insightful activity, students guess the complex qualities lost in conversation questions and then ask questions and answer them with the partner. Divide students into pairs (a and b) and give each student an interview worksheet. Students look at conversation questions that have gaps in their worksheet and think about what each vehicle attribute might be missing. Students get two chances to guess the missing boat character in each question. Student A begins by guessing the missing boat character in the first question. Student B listens, looks at the boat's character in bold on their worksheet and tells their partner if they are right or wrong. If the student guesses correctly the first time, they score two points and write the composite character in the question. If not, their partner gives them an idea by saying the first part of the compound recipe. For example, if the composite character is English-speaking, the student says English... If the student guesses correctly on the second attempt, one point is awarded. If not, the vehicle's status is disclosed and any points are scored. Student B then guesses the characteristic of the compound missing in the second question and so on. This continues until all compound qualities are revealed. The student who gets the most points at the end of the activity is the winner. After that, students ask and answer conversation questions with their partner. When all questions are discussed, there is a feedback session in the class to review the meaning of each compound attribute and go through students' answers to the questions. Composite Attributes Theme: Creating Composite Qualities 2 | Level: Medium/advanced for each of the following sentences, create a compound ADJECTIVE by combining words in bold in the first sentence.
